JACKSON GREGORY'S BIGGEST NOVEL

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

GEORGE MADDEN MARTIN

Faith in the American woman! That is what this Southern novelist has. Great things in the world she believes can be the accomplishment of her sex. By her writings and by manifold personal activities she is working toward that end.

The famous "Emmy Lou" books won for her a vast audience of readers, to whom the appeal of her keen understanding of the child mind proved a delight.

Her stories of the negro have aroused the attention of all interested in the race question. In "Children in the Mist" the negro himself saw a thoughtful and serious presentation of his problem and workers among the colored people recognized Mrs. Martin as a leader in thought upon the great national problem.

In her fictional studies of childhood and of the race question, Mrs. Martin was dealing with matters which she believes offer to womankind tremendous opportunities for fruitful achievement. Now she has turned to the central part of her belief and in her new novel, "March On," has written a powerful study of the modern woman, who finds in her possession a sudden and complete emancipation in a time when change is attacking all aspects of our national life.

Mrs. Martin is an active clubwoman, belonging to many organizations both here and abroad. She is an able lecturer, whose opportunities are frequent for presentation of her thought on the subjects with which she keeps in close touch. Her friends know her as a charming woman, who combines the fine flavor of the old Southern traditions with a forward looking spirit, which is essentially her own.

MARCH ON—"Mrs. Martin's new book has been worth waiting for—so fine and moving a performance is it. . . . She has given her message to her readers with a vitality, a flame of conviction, a noble and sweeping force of portrayal. . . . It is a novel of today that speaks thrillingly with the voice of the younger generation. . . . It is a novel, too, that is just now of peculiarly timely consequence . . . a stirring, flaming banner proclaiming the iniquity of war."—N. Y. Times Book Review. $2.00 net.

A LITTLE MORE

By W. B. Maxwell

Author of "The Devil's Garden," etc.

A new Maxwell novel that is bound to be one of the best sellers of 1922. A story that affords a rare combination of rich humor, brilliant characterization and high literary quality. It concerns the varying fortunes of a middle class family which constantly sought a "little more," until the futility of the quest was dramatically demonstrated. "It has magic, it is full of real human beings, it is change-ful and colorful and moving . . . will make a host of friends among Mr. Maxwell's public."

THE HOUSE OF CARDS

By Hannah Gartland

A novel of New York today. A well known man about town, a favorite of many women, a connoisseur of horses and wines and noted the world over for his skill at cards, is found dead in his big lonely house at daybreak. The police department and the Prosecuting Attorney's office find the mystery a labyrinth of blind trails. The real solution comes as a stunning surprise to the reader. "Without a doubt, 'The House of Cards' is by far the best mystery story brought out in many a day."—N. Y. Herald.

MIDNIGHT

By Octavus Roy Cohen

Author of "The Crimson Alibi," "Six Seconds of Darkness," etc.

Black magic! That's what it looked like. She entered the empty taxicab in a raging storm on the stroke of midnight, giving the driver an address on the outskirts of the city. Arriving there, he discovered—what? That the woman had vanished, apparently into thin air, and in her place was the dead body of a young and well known society man. A mystery-detective story that keeps you guessing and gasping and wondering how it will turn out.

The Truth About Henry Ford

A book that will be talked about

An intimate narrative about a famous, but little understood American.  In writing this chronicle the author, Sarah T. Bushnell, has had the co-operation of Mrs. Henry Ford, James Couzens (the mayor of Detroit, who for many years was Mr. Ford's partner) and other close friends of this master of men.  "The Truth About Henry Ford" gives for the first time the inside story of The Peace Ship, Mr. Ford's Senatorial Campaign, The Chicago Tribune Libel Suit. Ready March 1$1.25 Net.

Peewee, By William MacHarg

The Story of a Lost Identity

If you have been a friendless child, if you have had or longed to have children, this story of Chicago's "gold coast" and its slums—of love between a boy of eight and a woman of thirty—of a man's and woman's Past colliding with their Present about the figure of a child of the streets—will give you the thrill of mystery at the same time that it brings tears to your eyes.

Ready March 1$1.50 Net.

Saturday Nights, By Earl G. Curtis

A Strong Story by a New Author

"Saturday Nights" is a vivid presentation of existence that has its counterpart in many American towns and cities.  Here is a novel that deals with the emotions that lie far below the surface of life—emotions that sway the masses that toil.  The story is forthright, gripping and tense. A very human romance lightens the author's graphic picture. Ready March 1$1.50 Net

TO THE TRADE:

On Sunday, February twelfth, IF WINTER COMES will be six months old. Back on August twelfth, 1921, we published this novel with high hopes for it, but with no idea that it would be the most popular book in years. But just that has happened! The advance sales of IF WINTER COMES were 8600 copies, including 1500 copies sent to Canada. To date we have shipped out 265,673 copies, and the 305th thousand is printing. We know of no other novel published in the twentieth century, which, starting out in a small way, has rolled up such a total in so short a time.

IF WINTER COMES still heads the lists of best sellers both in England and America, and according to the latest report in the Bookman is the novel most in demand at the public libraries. We have every reason to believe that its popularity will continue undiminished for many months to come, and it seems likely that this splendid novel is destined to break records in point of total sales.

We find a steadily increasing demand for Mr. Hutchinson's other novels, ONCE ABOARD THE LUGGER--, THE HAPPY WARRIOR, and THE CLEAN HEART, and there is every indication that during 1922 they will out-sell most new novels.

Hutchinson's place in literature as one of the really great novelists of this century has been definitely established. His books will be in active demand for many years to come. In response to numerous requests, we shall issue on February twenty-fifth an attractive Pocket Edition, bound in limp leather, of his four novels, and we believe that the book trade will find a ready sale for this edition among their many customers who wish to have all of Hutchinson's novels on their library shelves.

With much appreciation of the splendid coöperation on the part of the book trade throughout the country, without which such an amazing success as that of IF WINTER COMES would have been impossible, we are

Yours very truly,

February 7th, 1922.

Love and Chivalry

and the desire to read about the Great Loves of noted people and the chivalry of noble men will never die. Witness the enormous success which romances such as "RICHARD CARVEL," "THE BROAD HIGHWAY," and many other noted novels have enjoyed. It is with these facts in mind that we present a story founded on fact that we believe will meet this great popular demand.

THE BRACEGIRDLE

THE FACTS

Anne Bracegirdle, English actress of the 17th century. The date of her birth is usually assigned to 1663 but by some it is put ten years later. She had a brilliant career on the stage till 1707 when she and her rival, Mrs. Oldfield, played "Mrs. Brittle" in Betterton's "Amorous Widow" on successive nights. The audience awarded the palm to Mrs. Oldfield, whereupon her rival quitted the stage, never to return, except for Betterton's benefit performance in 1709. She achieved her greatest successes as an actress in the plays of Congreve, to whom she was suspected of being secretly married. Rightly or wrongly, she had a high reputation of virtue. She was commonly called "The Darling" and "The Diana of the English Stage."

THE STORY

Here is a truly delightful romance of London in the days of King William of Orange: the story of charming Anne Bracegirdle. Pursued by lovers galore who threaten to run each other through for her favors, she proves capable of handling the most tense and critical situations, with wit and courage. The author has the rare power of bringing vividly before the reader the scenes and characters of those troublesome yet fascinating times when the stage was still young. We hear the ring of swords, the thunder of pursuit, the acclaim of crowds, and feel deeply the romantic spirit of that gloriously chivalrous age. Interwoven with action that stirs the blood is the heart-appealing tenderness of a great love. The plot concerns such characters as Congreve, Dryden, Lord Halifax and other noted folk.

NEW, OLD, & RARE BOOKS

THE NEWEST BOOKS for late winter publication include another instalment of Mrs. Asquith's fascinating and disturbing "Autobiography," which continues her recollections; an important study by Louis Madelin of "Danton"; "Manon Philipon Roland," by Evangeline Wilbour Blashfield; George Nathan's "The Critic and the Drama"; and a work similar to H. G. Wells's "Outline of History," entitled "The Outline of Science," under the editorship of Prof. J. Arthur Thomson. The new fiction is very promising, including: "Cythera," by Joseph Hergesheimer; "The Memoirs of a Midget," an extraordinary performance by the English poet, Walter de la Mare; "Scarhaven Keep," a new mystery story by J. S. Fletcher; and "The Hills of Ruel," by Fiona McLeod.

THE RARE BOOKS DEPARTMENT has specialized in books on Natural History—Birds, Animals, Butterflies, and Fishes—and is unusually replete with all the standard works on these subjects in the best editions and with the beautifully colored plates in the finest condition. There are also very fine copies of Repton and the other old garden writers, with colored and folding plates.

NEW FRENCH BOOKS recently arrived include: René Boylesve's "Le carrosse aux deux lézards verts"; Claude Farrère's "L'extraordinaire aventure d'Achment Pacha"; Georges Duhamel's "Les Hommes abandonnés"; Pierre Villetard's "Le Château sous les roses"; and Benjamin Vallotton's "Achille & Cie."

AN ORDEAL OF HONOR

By ANTHONY PRYDE

Author of "Marquerry's Duel," "Jenny Essenden," "Nightfall."

Within the brief space of two years Mr. Anthony Pryde has won an enviable place among writers of romantic fiction, and a popularity among fiction readers which is constantly growing. A writer with a marked facility in the manipulation of plots, he is also the possessor of a gift for creating characters who stand out in sharply defined reality from their background and from one another and who speak in a brilliant, audacious fashion. His novels are swiftly moving, revolving about situations which are often bold and startling. His scene is almost invariably the political and fashionable England of today and his people the urbane, sophisticated men and women who inhabit it.

The qualities which have made Mr. Pryde's other books popular are present in ample measure in An Ordeal of Honor. The story of a man accused of a crime in which he has no part, of misfortune heroically borne, and of a love which endures in spite of doubt and even degradation, it is a book which is unfailingly dramatic and which will assure the author of a still warmer place in the esteem of the many readers whom his other novels have won for him. $2 net.

THE ROMANCE of a GREAT STORE

By EDWARD HUNGERFORD

Author of "The Personality of American Cities," "The Modern Railroad," etc.

An account of the growth and development of one of our great modern mercantile establishments: R. H. Macy & Company. Mr. Hungerford presents the salient facts in the history of Macy's department store, and discusses in detail the operating methods of the organization: how merchandise is bought; the methods of retailing; the training of employees; the operation of the delivery system; and the numberless practices adopted to insure that the public will receive the maximum of service. A final section of the book discusses the plans which have been made for the development of the establishment.

Although it is addressed primarily to the student of modern retailing methods Mr. Hungerford has presented his subject so lucidly and with such an emphasis upon the "human side" of the organization that it possesses a decided interest for the general reader also. KIMONO

PARIS

"The Kimono
is a symbol, with all a symbol's mysterious influence—the subjection of woman in Japan"

*Japan
Chronicle*

211/02

One of the "big books" of 1922!

“What Interests People?”

Lord Northcliffe says in a recent article in The American Magazine that “among the two or three books people are most interested in just now on the other side is KIMONO, a novel of Anglo-Saxon and Japanese life.”

Reading the reviews from the English press makes one certain that the book will start a furore over here. (We were going to quote some of the fine comments of the foreign press, but refer you to the end papers of the novel itself, where about fifteen or so are given.)

KIMONO is the story of the marriage of an Englishman to a Japanese girl, an orphan of great wealth, who has been brought up in Europe; of how they go to Japan against the advice of their friends and for a time are parted, half by the efforts of her Japanese relatives, and half by his discovery that her money is derived from property in the Yoshiwara (Japan's official houses of prostitution).

But more, Japan, the mysterious, the inscrutable, its soul and spirit, are revealed never to be forgotten.

The author of KIMONO is a well-known English diplomat, who was attached for five years to the British Legation in Japan (John Paris is a pseudonym).

KIMONO is destined to be a great seller without a doubt from the hour the book is out on your counters (several American publishers have made flattering offers for our rights). The more you have on hand, of course—!

An Advance Notice of Spring Books

YOUNG BOSWELL

BY CHAUNCEY BREWSTER TINKER

Professor Tinker of Yale University, the recognized authority on 18th century English literature, gives us here a new book based on what is considered to be a miraculous discovery of manuscript letters written by the Boswell, not yet known to fame, to Rousseau, Oliver Goldsmith, John Wilkes, and many of the celebrities and notorieties of the day. A few of Professor Tinker's chapters will be printed in the ATLANTIC. In the book there will be many illustrations, chiefly reproductions of manuscripts and unfamiliar prints. The volume will therefore have the same appearance as A. Edward Newton's highly popular "Amenities of Book Collecting" and "A Magnificent Farce," and will doubtless have the same wide appeal as well as an important place in permanent literature.

THE IRON MAN

BY ARTHUR POUND

Arthur Pound, an alumnus of the University of Michigan, lives at Flint, a manufacturing center for automobiles, where the development of automatic machinery has been carried to the highest point. THE IRON MAN is the automatic machine, and Mr. Pound studies its effect upon human beings in a variety of ways and in their relations with life. His knowledge of the human problems of factory management is the result of years of intelligent and imaginative study. A few of the articles have appeared in the ATLANTIC, where they have attracted much attention.

FINDING YOUTH

By NELSON ANDREWS

Sixty Years is the age for Finding Youth, according to Nelson Andrews, and his remarkable story is one of actual experience. It is an intensely interesting account of the way in which this man took Fate by storm, found work, and founded a community made of other young men and women of his own age. The author says: "This story is told because others need to know it. They need to know it now, when all the world is making a blind struggle to find youth—a new creative spirit." It is an inspiring message of hope and optimism to older men and a story of strong human interest.

Four Unusual Abingdon Books

BEYOND SHANGHAI

By HAROLD SPEAKMAN

This exceedingly charming "look in" upon China is unique because it is "different." The author says: "I made a solemn compact with myself not to attempt to describe, sketch, or otherwise molest the imperial palaces at Peking, but to see as much as I could of the Chinese people themselves in their humblest and most intimate surroundings, to live alone with the Chinese and to eat their food." And this he did, and the fruitage of his unusual experiences is given in this interesting book, embellished by eight illustrations in color from paintings made on the spot by the author.

A HANDFUL OF STARS

By F. W. BOREHAM

The author appropriates the title of this book from Caliban, who cries out, "O God, if you wish for our love, fling us a handful of stars." And these "stars" are gathered together to make a companion to his volume entitled "A Bunch of Everlastings," for "it is not good that a book should be alone."

WITH EARTH AND SKY

By BISHOP WILLIAM A. QUAYLE

These are communications from a dweller in the innermost heart of Nature and a friend of God. He has an amazing insight into the Creative Mind and possesses in a marvelous degree the capacity for comprehension and the ability for interpretation! These essays are full of the mystery of the recurring seasons, and of the ineffable glory of flower and field, of mountains, meadow, river and prairie, of star and sun and cloud,—and one is reminded of the praiseful Psalmist who bursts out with this song: "Let everything . . . praise the Lord."

This is the first time that the new titles of these "Important" series have been published at this season of the year. We are making this innovation because we believe that right now, in the after-holiday season, there is an opportunity to push the sales of Juvenile books into almost undreamed of figures.

And why not? These winter afternoons and evenings are ideal times for the boy and girl to read; the books which the youngsters receive at Christmas time have aroused their fresh interest in the different juvenile series; in many cases they still have their Christmas money to spend. Just consider what an appeal the New Reduced Price will make to them!

Isn't this the psychological moment to give them new titles in the most popular series in the market—the series they have learned to enjoy;—the new titles they look for and have never had before at this time?

It certainly looks to us as though this gives a tremendously big opportunity to follow up the Christmas trade of books for the boys and girls.

You can enjoy a large Juvenile business now.

The Canyon of the Fools

by Richard Matthews Hallet

Richard Matthews Hallet is the man whose serial stories have won such genuine approval from America's millions of magazine readers. Because he is a born story teller, who puts into his work the essence of adventure and romance and humor as he has distilled them from life by his own astonishing contacts. Since his university days he has combed the land and the sea for experience. The result is a first novel whose distinctive humor, unique plot and picaresque characters set it in a class apart from the work of any of the younger American writers of to-day. It is a story of a hunt for gold, a tale of love and excitement, told with chuckles.

A book that will be read for the sheer joy of the reading. No description can possibly get the spirit of it. We feel its success is assured. It will be published March 16th. $2.00

by S. B. H. Hurst

It was published on February 1st. Already critics are vindicating the Publishers' judgment that in the author of this strange tale they have made a literary find.

Sidney Williams in the Philadelphia North American: "Seldom indeed, appears a tale comparable to Coomer Ali in candid unveiling of men in the clutch of greed." Wilson Follett: "I size Mr. Hurst up as a writer who can never be anything but inimitable and a delight; his hurricane at sea is the next best thing to Conrad's Typhoon. I read the book with vast enjoyment, and at one sitting."

It's a breath-taking story of intrigue—of Mohammedans and white men who have cast their lot in the Far East. Re-order to day on this book which is being widely advertised, and which will bring every buyer back for the other S. B. H. Hurst novels to follow.

The Worth of a Salesman's Time

IT is worth while for industry to pause occasionally to estimate the industrial value of those men who tour the country month after month, bringing to the attention of the retailers the product of the manufacturers.

Those who carefully study the problems of distribution and the elements that enter into successful and economical merchandising never fail to come from such an investigation with an increased respect for the pivotal value of those who in the field are the representatives of established lines or of new proposals. It is sometimes speciously argued that there would be a saving in the ultimate cost of a product if the expenses of travelers were dispensed with, but actual experiments in this direction have shown that this change is uneconomical in result, and that only by means of personal presentation can the goods be distributed in quantities that accomplish low production cost.

The method that preceded this era of the traveler was the system that brought the retailer annually or semi-annually to the large distributing centers to select his goods. There is in this operation a larger expenditure of time than by having travelers in the field, except in some lines of merchandise, where the year's buying can be planned at one special time and where there are advantages in seeing large contrasted groups of merchandise at one time.

Successful retailers who analyze the elements that have permitted them promptly and adequately to meet the needs of their communities are always generous in their appreciation of what the contact with the well-informed traveler means to them. They get information, suggestions and selling inspiration that could not be had from cold type, and these travelers acquire a keen faculty of taking from one place to another ideas for buying and selling that are an important contribution to the success of all stores.

The old-fashioned idea that a traveler was a man to be kept scraping his feet on the door mat has pretty well passed away, altho there are still some buyers who believe that they need high fences around their time in order to protect them from the inroads of the sample cases. The contact between the traveler and the retailer is after all a short allotment of time for the value that can be obtained, and if the retailer is well-prepared with a knowledge of his business and local conditions, there is everything to gain by giving ample time to the traveler and not only in giving ample time but giving it as promptly as conditions permit. The idea that the dignity of a buyer is increased by the number of hours he can keep someone waiting in his city for attention should pass out along with all other misunderstandings between buyer and seller. In the long run the buyer must pay for waste of time just as he must pay for everything that affects the cost of a product, and in these times when everyone is interested in reduction of cost there is a real reason for careful husbanding of the time of the travelers.

One Thousand Members Needed

REPORTS coming in from the Executive Committee of the American Booksellers' Association indicate that it is aggressively handling the vital problem of increased membership. The Convention last spring set 1000 members as its objective, and no better time could be selected for such a drive. Booksellers scattered over the country too little realize what the national organization, even with its slight machinery, has done to better the conditions under which they work, and even tho unable to attend the Convention, these dealers ought to give their moral support by joining and their financial support which will enable the Executive Committee to accomplish more.

One of the Convention Committee recently wrote: "Many of our prominent booksellers who are not members of the A. B. A. are laboring under the impression that our Conventions are just a lark and that many things are discussed there that have no vital importance or are not important enough to warrant their attending the Convention.

"Now is the time to correct this impression. The future of the book business has great promise, and we must make our organization complete and make it stand for nationwide effort to improve bookselling conditions."

Maintaining Standards

STATISTICS and percentages have never received such wide attention as in the past few years. We find them on all sides molding our opinions. It often seems, however, as the figures were quite generally suspected by those that read them. Among current statistics received are some from the National Industrial Conference Board whose charts show that the dollar is now worth 61.1 c. This would mean that $2 ought to buy $1.22 worth of books at the 1914 level. It does, in fact, buy about $1.40 worth, but the retailer who may suggest this will find that customers do not believe figures implicitly.

From the Federal Reserve statistics just at hand we find that the Department of Labor estimates that December wholesale prices were at 149, again a higher figure than that which is current on books. The Department of Labor figures indicate that the cost of living in New York City is at 178.1; again books seem to be low. Furniture and household furnishings are at 232; miscellaneous at 216.9. Books presumably fall into one of these two classifications but it is important to note that books are one of the commodities which are far below the average.

We notice a comment on book prices from the makers of binding board, who point out that their prices have come down heavily while books only slightly, but binding board went up the 300% by 1920, and even after a heavy drop is still 100% higher than in 1914. If books had gone up on the same rocketing plane, there would be plenty of room to come down.

All of these fresh figures do not indicate that there should not be a continuing effort to keep prices of books at the lowest level possible, as it is everyone's wish to get the widest distribution obtainable. At the same time, there is comment from many sides on the need of improving the physical aspect of all books to give them greater beauty and durability.

In our department of Good Book-Making, we have been endeavoring to keep this subject to the front steadily during the time when standards of manufacture were difficult to maintain. We now believe that increasing discussion should be given to this subject, as books that are worth printing are worth printing in a way that will be attractive and durable. It is not possible to plan each new book in several different types of editions, one for the collector, one for the library and one for the casual reader. All groups have got to be supplied from one common stock but greater dignity and durability can be obtained over a wider group of current publications, and publishers must realize that dealers and consumers are very much alert on this subject at the present time.

Turnovers and Leftovers

ABOUT fifteen years ago," writes a publisher, "I was taken to the buyers' room in one of the large department stores of Boston. There were booths along one side of the room, and above the row of booths extending the length of the room in large letters were painted the words:

WE MAKE MONEY ON OUR TURNOVERS AND LOSE MONEY ON OUR LEFTOVERS

There has been unquestionably a new appreciation of what the turnover may mean, and its importance has not escaped the attention of every good retailer. As a rule for present business prosperity, the above motto is hard to improve upon.

At the recent annual meeting of the National Association of Book Publishers, President Hiltman spoke of the present importance of quick turnover in the book world, and said that he believed the publishers as well as retailers must mould their business plans to have quick turnover and lose less on the leftover. As the time for spring orders comes and the travelers appear with catalogs and lists of new books, this subject is one which is again vitally to the front.

The best way to increase turnover on already published books seems to be to take ample time to check the catalogs with regard to past sales and present stock. The public is not going to be permanently interested in the bookstore that does not take great pains to have the books wanted on hand when they are called for, and a slighting of check-ups is a quick method of bringing that kind of criticism upon the book-seller's head.

In spite of the fluctuating character of book demands, the sales and purchases of one year do give valuable information as to the needs of the next. Not to take time and pains to get the benefit of that information is to encourage careless buying. The bookseller who had a market for ten copies of a staple book in the spring months of last year is as much mistaken if he orders one copy this year as if he orders fifteen copies. Neither order is based on accurate knowledge or understanding of turnover.

Act Now for a Just Tariff on Books

The Present Schedules in the Fordney Bill Menace all Book Interests

IF the Fordney Tariff Bill should pass in its present form the book business of the United States and the educational and literary interests of the country would suffer to an unparalleled extent. A strong presentation of the need of changes in the bill has been made to the Ways and Means Committee and to the Senate Finance Committee by representatives of the publishers, booksellers, libraries, educational institutions and toy book manufacturers. The tariff is now at the front for final action, and every member of the book-trade and every institution interested in the use of books should put behind these filed protests their strongest and most urgent personal pressure, in order that the danger may be averted. No tariff is settled until the Bill is finally passed and signed, and in the next two weeks protests to Congress and especially to members of the Finance Committee of the Senate are extremely important.

In order to make clear the character of the most needed changes, seven points are listed on the following page and following that are tentatively suggested the revisions that would be needed in order to bring these changes about.

Changes in paragraph 1529-30 would put books over twenty years old and books in foreign languages back on the free list. There has been no good reason suggested from any direction for the omission of these from the free list. Books over twenty years old are non-competitive, they are needed for the enrichment of the educational and literary resources of the country. The income from a tariff on these would be of negligible value to the government compared to the importance of having such material come readily to our public and private libraries. The public libraries would be exempt from this tax by further provisions but would have the annoying detail of filing manifestos with each importation.

No printers or publishers in this country have contended that there is need of a protection on foreign language books, and to omit them from the free list would be a step backward that should not be thought of. We owe it to ourselves to have the fullest and easiest intellectual contact with all the world, and we owe it to all our new citizens that they be able to obtain books in their own languages without extra expense.

The duty on English books under twenty years old has been set at twenty per cent, which is five per cent higher than the last tariff and five percent lower than the previous Republican tariff. Competent testimony shows that books can be manufactured here as cheaply as in England, and twenty per cent is ample protection for the printers.

It would be especially unfortunate to double or triple this by the use of such expedients as the American Valuation or the use of American wholesale prices, instead of English cost prices for levying this duty. The American Valuation Plan of appraisement as provided for in the present draft of the bill in Section 402 would be almost impossible of application to books. No two books are exactly alike, and the appraisers would be obliged to give the American importers unwarranted delays while they endeavored to estimate what the American valuation of a book might be.

The theory of American Valuation has been to protect American manufacturers against the product of the countries where there was extraordinary monetary depression. The condition of English exchange, however, does not justify such radical measures to protect American book industry, and such protection has not been asked for by the publishers. The only type of book that might suffer from such competition is the children's toy book, which should be more clearly protected in the toy section, as per the sound suggestion of the toy book manufacturers.

If Congress should adopt in place of the American Valuation method the plan of basing tariff on American wholesale prices instead of on the cost in the country of exportation, this would practically double the duty on books with a great disadvantage to the people as a whole to whom access to books of all countries at the lowest rate possible is of more importance than this slight added revenue for the government.

The insertion in the book paragraph (1310) of a special tho ambiguous reference to leather bound books is not justified by the needs of the case. Evidence before the Senate Finance Committee shows that leather binding is at present as low in this country as they are in England and that twenty per cent tariff would amply protect the binding industry of leather bound as well as cloth bound books and books in sheets.

The change in duty free privileges of libraries to restrict their totals has not been justified by any evidence submitted, and the restriction on the amount that families may bring into the country of books in their private libraries is entirely uncalled for and not needed by any standard of protective measures.

The evidence placed before Congress has consisted of a brief presented and filed by John Macrae, representing the publishers and booksellers, a very carefully analyzed presentation of the faults in the measure presented by M. Llewellyn Raney, representing the American Library Association and the educational interests of the country; a brief representing the retailers filed last fall with the Ways and Means Committee by Charles E. Butler, representing the booksellers, and a later brief with careful reanalysis of the situation from a retail point of view presented to the Senate Finance Committee by Charles E. Lauriat, Jr., of Boston; a brief presented and filed by Charles E. Graham, representing the toy book manufacturers.

The printers and binders sent counsel to argue for a higher duty than the twenty per cent, but presented no concrete figures to indicate that American industry needed a higher rate for its prosperity. The difference between the cost in the two countries is now too closely paralleled to make such a rate just or productive in any sense.

The brief presented by the libraries did not touch on the need for the elimination of the American Valuation or American wholesale method of appraisement which is so important to the book-trade, as this would not affect their duty free privilege which is being supported by all parties. But, while the libraries would not be affected by the duty on old books or on foreign books, if levied, they have given the strong weight of their protest in America's best interest.

Let Everyone Write Congress

Every one in the book-trade or library and educational world who believes in keeping the channels of book distribution open and on a just and reasonable basis should write to Congress either to the Committee members or others in order that the vital importance of changes in the book paragraphs be not overlooked.

If this book-trade statement were put in the hands of every local paper a wave of interest would be started that would reach Washington.

FORDNEY TARIFF BILL—H. R. 7456

The following changes in the book schedules are urgently recommended:

1. The duty on all books bound or unbound except such as may be otherwise provided for should not be more than 20% ad valorem based on cost price to importer in country of exportation (Par. 1310.)
2. Children's toy books should be protected under toys (Par. 1414) with clarified description of what constitutes a toy book and the 40% duty as proposed.
3. Books should be specifically exempted from American Valuation appraisement (Sec. 402) as being impractical to apply and unnecessary for adequate protection of this American industry.

4. Books over 20 years old should be reinstated on the Free List. (Par. 1529.)
5. Books in foreign languages should be reinstated on the Free List. (Par. 1530.)
6. Libraries and educational institutions should be given the same duty free privilege as before, i. e., not to exceed two in any one invoice instead of two in all. (Par. 1531.)
7. The libraries of families from other countries should be duty free without the limitation of $250. (Par. 1532.)

1. Duty on books should not be more than 20 per cent ad valorem based on cost price to importer in country of exportation.

This would be accomplished by inserting the following in Par. 1310, after the words "20 per centum ad valorem."

"on the actual price paid or to be paid in the country of exportation, not inclusive of royalties, or, in the case such price is not predetermined, then the wholesale price or market value, not inclusive of royalties in the country of exportation on the quantities sold for such exportation."

Leather bound books would be given adequate protection when covered by the same 20 per cent as other books.

This would be accomplished by the elimination of the ambiguous line from Par. 1310, lines 5-7,

"books bound wholly or in part in leather, the chief value of which is in the binding, not specially provided for, 33 1/3 per centum ad valorem."

2. Children's toy books should be adequately protected under the toy schedules and not by a confusing mention in both book and toy paragraphs.

This can be accomplished by eliminating from Par. 1310, lines 7-10,

"books of paper or other material for children's use, printed lithographically or otherwise, not exceeding in weight twenty-four ounces each, with more reading matter than letters, numerals, or descriptive words, 20 per centum ad valorem."

And by slightly clarifying the description of toy books used in Par. 1414, which gives 40 per centum ad valorem duty, to read, following the words "toy balloons" on line 2:

"toy books printed on paper or cloth, unbound or flexibly bound, or in bindings of card board bearing illuminated cover design for children, printed lithographically or otherwise."

This to take the place of the present description, which reads:

"toy books without reading matter other than letters, numerals or descriptive words, bound or unbound, and parts thereof."

3. There should be a specific exemption of books from American Valuation appraisement of Sec. 402.

This should be accomplished by adding the following to Sec. 402 at the end thereof:

"Provided, however, that books shall be exempted from the method of valuation prescribed above and "value" in the case of books shall mean the actual price paid or to be paid in the country of exportation not inclusive of royalties, or, in the cases where such price is not predetermined, then the wholesale price or market value, not inclusive of royalties in the countries of exportation on the quantities sold for such exportation."

Testimony submitted to the Finance Committee of the Senate showed not only that the added protection of American Valuation is not needed or desired by the book industry but that it would be peculiarly annoying and complicated in operation as applied to books.

American Valuation is designed primarily as a protection against the depreciated currency of the countries of central Europe; but those countries publish practically no books in the English language and so are not competitors of American publishers. The currency of English speaking countries is nowhere sufficiently depreciated to constitute a menace to American publishers, so that the most weighty argument in favor of American Valuation fails in the case of books.

4. Books over 20 years old should be returned to the Free List as being non-competitive and as necessary to the educational and intellectual progress of the country.

This can be done by prefixing to Par. 1529 the following from Par. 425 of the Act of 1913 (agreeing with Par. 517 of the Act of 1909):

"Books, maps, music, engravings, photographs, etchings, lithographic prints, bound or unbound, and charts, which shall have been printed more than 20 years at the date of importation, and all"

Books over 20 years old have been on the Free List for half a century. It would be a grave injustice to the scholars and book-lovers of the country, as well as to the trade, to change this long standing exemption.

In the hearings before the Finance Committee no reason or argument was advanced for imposing a duty on old books, but every speaker who mentioned the subject agreed that they should be restored to the free list.

5. Books in foreign languages should be returned to the Free List, as being in no large sense competitive, necessary to better international understanding and American scholarship, and important to a vast number of our new citizens.

This can be accomplished by prefixing to Par. 1513 the following from Par. 426 of the Act of 1913 (agreeing with Par. 518 of Act of 1909):

"Books and pamphlets wholly or chiefly in languages other than English; also"

6. Reinstate the former privileges of libraries and schools by making Par. 1531, lines 10 and 12 of the Free List read:

"may import free of duty, not to exceed in any one invoice two copies of any book, map, music, engraving, photograph, etching, lithographic print, or chart."

There are no indications that the closer restriction is necessary.

7. In Par. 1532, reading,

"Books and libraries of persons or families from foreign countries if actually used abroad by them not less than one year, and not intended for any other person or persons, nor for sale, and not exceeding $250 in value."

eliminate the words, "and not exceeding $250 in value" as not necessary for protective purposes.

No reason has been advanced for the insertion of this unnecessary limitation. It would certainly not benefit the publishers and book trade of the United States, nor would it produce enough revenue to pay the cost of administration.

Making a Fortune on Four Hours a Day

By George W. Gether

Reprinted from M. I. S. T.

HOW many hours a day does the average outside salesman work? It has been proved again and again that by working more, the salesman makes more sales, which means that he makes more money. Once the actual figures have been put before a salesman, if he is a real salesman and not an order-taker, an improvement of from 50 to 100 per cent and even more is noticed in his results.

Some salesmen work only two hours a day, yet they manage to make comfortable livings. They are happy and contented, and think they are successful. Back somewhere in their minds is the dim thought of maybe making ten per cent more when "conditions" are right.

They don't realize that they could double their sales by doubling their two hours of work to four, making twice as much, and, by saving the increase, retire happily ever afterward in ten or fifteen years.

Probably if they were to be told that they worked only two hours a day they would be insulted.

Two hours a day!

Let's see, now. Here's a salesman's day:

8:30 to 9:45, at the store;

9:45 to 10:10, trolley car;

10:10 to 10:35, with prospect;

10:35 to 10:50, walking;

10:50 to 11:30, with prospect;

11:30 to noon, trolley car;

Noon to 1:00, lunch;

1:00 to 1:50, fussing at desk;

1:50 to 2:05, trolley;

2:05 to 2:55, with prospect;

2:55 to 3:00, walking;

3:00 to 3:10, with prospect;

3:10 to 3:35, trolley;

3:35 to 5:40, fussing about the store;

5:40, left for home.

How many hours of work is that? Eight thirty to five forty, nine hours total? Not on your life.

Look again. First, there's "10:10 to 10:35, with prospect." There's 25 minutes work. Go on down the list. One hundred and twenty-five minutes with prospects—two hours and five minutes of work and the rest of the day gone blooey! Not a call in the evening, either, the best time of all for home selling.

What is work, anyway? Work has just one justification and that is the result. Mere activity that cannot bring direct results in sales is no kind of work for a salesman. The work that counts in selling is the work done with the prospect.

Here it is in a nutshell.

A salesman works only when he is in the presence of the prospect.

Of course there are a lot of unproductive things a salesman has to do. He can't help it that all the prospects don't live side by side on Prospect street, but are scattered all over the map. He has to spend time getting from place to place. He has to spend a few minutes at headquarters daily, getting the mail, the latest dope from the manufacturer, and proving to the boss that he is on the job.

The point is that these unproductive things are mighty nice to do, and it is all too easy to get tied up in a mess of inside stuff that doesn't lead anywhere except in.

The salesman has to get out—out where the business is to be had, out among the prospects. The more prospects he sees in a day, the greater his chances of making sales and the greater his chances, the greater his fortune.

Some amount of unproductive time is inevitable. It takes time to get from place to place, for instance. Yet much lost time can be turned to account—in the presence of the prospect. How much is up to you. If a salesman is occupied with business for eight hours a day, it is liberal enough to allow him half that time for traveling, the main and one really unavoidable "time out" from selling.

Four hours a day for work.

In the presence of prospects.

A salesman is not working unless he is selling.

Four hours a day of selling.

In the presence of prospects.

The Bookstore's Star Salesman

By Michael Gross

President, The Michael Gross Company, New York.

IF you were told there was a third-story loft right around the corner from your present location, into which you could move your book shop and thereby cut your present rent bill in half, what would your answer be?

Undoubtedly you would say something to this effect: "I know I can save a good deal of money by moving into a loft but what chance would I have of doing business without a show

Why should this be so? Any book-seller will readily admit that there is no more faithful salesman in his employ than the show window of his store. It stays on the job day and night; never takes an hour off to eat, or a day off to loaf; is never too tired to show goods—and never asks for a raise. Yet how often do we find this "star salesman" being shamefully neglected? How often is the show window used window in which to display my merchandise?" Which answer would be about one hundred per cent correct, the proof of its accuracy being that landlords figure practically the same way in determining the rent of a store: two-fifths for the store itself and three-fifths for the show window which faces the street. On main thoroughfares in big cities, the show window may bring as high as nine-tenths of the total rent charged.

But while it is true that most booksellers sense the value of their show window as a sales-stimulator, and realize they are paying a stiff premium for the privilege of having one, very few of them really make a profit on this investment; in other words, get enough increased business out of their trims to pay for the window and a little over besides.

merely to let light into the store—instead of additional cash into the register.

No other part of a business so generously repays for thought and effort as will the window. Don't say that books are hard to form into attractive displays. The photograph which illustrates this article disproves the statement. And what convincing testimony the picture offers of the fact that a complete window full of books really does pay—as well, if not better, than a display of other merchandise! If book displays can be made to pay in New York, where window space is worth anywhere from two to ten dollars a square foot, rest assured they will prove worth while in a smaller town. When a store on one of the costliest store sites in the country can see a profit in trimming an entire window with books alone, there are possibilities for a bookseller in a smaller town.

Of course, the displays arranged by these big stores are no haphazard affairs—no mere piling of a lot of books into a window and calling it a day's work. Not only is the arrangement carefully planned beforehand but the titles themselves are carefully scrutinized to see whether they are appropriate both for the season of the year and for the class of people to whom the store caters. A detective trim can be featured during a particularly dull, rainy season of the year, when the average business man who passes this window wants to do nothing better than get home, have a bite, and then settle down into a comfortable arm chair with a rattling good detective story.

Interviews with men in charge of trimming the "big windows" in New York City, show that all of them, broadly speaking, adhere to the following "ten commandments" in planning a book display:

1. Lighting: Have all the lights in the window concealed. Electricity is no longer a novelty. The time has passed when people will travel miles to catch a glimpse of an electric bulb. What you are most interested in selling is books—not mazdas. And keep the bulbs clean. Lighting experts figure that bulbs which have not been cleaned for two weeks give only two-thirds of the illumination they should, due to the film of dust thru which the light must first filter. Also be sure that your lights are shaded, so that every bit of the illumination is concentrated on the merchandise, where it rightfully belongs.

2. Back up your window. A person who is interested enough to stop in front of your display should have his eyes kept there. Being able to see what is going on inside the store causes the attention to wander to the interior instead of being concentrated on the window trim. Don't dress your window either above or below the eye level of the average person who passes the store. If you have a very high window, it is better to use side lights, in order to secure even illumination on the display.

3. Have your window reflect the season. Don't build a massive window full of ponderous books in July. Don't display light and airy novels in the dead of winter. June—and not December—is the time for books on house-keeping and home-making and cooking. Rainy, gloomy March and April is the time for detective fiction and other absorbing stories that make the reader forget there is such a thing as bad weather. July and August are natural born salesmen for books on boating, bathing and all outdoor sports. See that the text matter of your signs and window displays also links up to the season of the year. "FOR THESE RAINY, CHILLY NIGHTS WE HEARTILY RECOMMEND

A COMFORTABLE ARMCHAIR, A WARM FIRE AND ANY BOOK IN THIS WINDOW" carries more of an appeal to the passerby at certain seasons of the year than would a Lyendecker original in your window.

4. Avoid "fancy" sets. Don't get bitten by the art bug and think you would like to try the effect of putting just one book in your show window, contrasted against an orange-colored drape. That idea sounds fine when the Greenwich Villager who has just moved around the corner tells you about it. But in actual practice it doesn't work out quite so well. What constitutes a good book, like the question of what makes a good horse at the race track, is largely a matter of opinion. That's why you must have a window full of titles if you have any at all. A person who stops in front of your window with the idea in mind of buying a book wants to see a large selection and pick what he thinks is the best of the lot. Look at the display used as an illustration for this article. Do you think that any person who even remotely believed he wanted to buy a book could look into that window and not see something which appealed to him.

5. Change your windows often—once a week is not at all too often to show something new. In a small town especially, it does not take long for every prospective purchaser to see your display. If you do not change your window often the time will soon come when people will stop looking into it at all. None of us like to look at the same thing over and over again (a woman with a mirror excepted, of course). Constant change means constant interest—which interest, in turn, means increased sales. Is the extra time worth the extra sales? It is up to you to make the decision.

6. Use displays and posters sent you. You would be very much surprised if you knew what these "silent salesmen" cost the publishers who send them. One selling effort last year cost the publisher nearly two dollars each for the window sets—and over a thousand of each were ordered. Many book-sellers take the attitude that when they use a display sent them by a publisher they are virtually giving over their window to the selling of his book. This viewpoint is, at best, short-sighted. The more books you sell the more books you have to buy from the publisher—that fact is obvious. And we also willingly admit that if the book-seller didn't sell books the publishers might starve—but then, so might the booksellers. Don't worry over the fact that displays will help sell a certain book for a publisher or that you are giving him your window for nothing. You can't sell books for the publisher without selling them for yourself—take that thought to heart and be comforted.

7. Shades down while window is being trimmed. Your clerk may be the handsomest fellow in seven counties, but he rarely shows up to advantage in the store window at high noon, with his sleeves rolled up and a trickle of perspiration running down the bridge of his nose. And there is also an element of mystery that people seem to like in seeing a shade down and then, later in the day, having it go up again, disclosing a new display.

8. Use judgment in color schemes. Don't place books with red jackets against a red background. If you are arranging a trim with books that have highly-colored wrappers, keep the background a neutral tint, so that a contrast is afforded. Don't try for an "all-star" performance. Subordinate everything to the merchandise you are trying to sell—BOOKS.

9. Get across the atmosphere of books. In trimming a holiday window, endeavor to get the idea of the holiday across and then show books as forming part of the festival. A Christmas window in New York City that attracted considerable attention showed a cozy room with a fireplace in one corner and a Christmas tree in the other. Inside the fireplace could be seen the boot-clad legs of Santa coming down the chimney. A bagful of books lay on the floor, as tho Santa had first thrown them down. A large sign above the display read: GIVE BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS. In the same way a vacation window might have a gang-plank leading to a painted drop in the rear of the window showing a boat at anchor. Once the idea of vacation reading is hammered home it is easy enough to get books into the scene—and the connection is far more natural than if the books were first "put over."

10. Never forget or neglect the windows. The tenth commandment is merely a summary of the other nine: You pay at least sixty per cent of your rent for your show window. It is—or, at least, should be, your star salesman. Do not let it die from neglect.

List of Religious Books

A SUGGESTION in connection with Religious Book Week has been made that the local booksellers could get attention concentrated on important literature in this field by asking the local ministers to list for them what they considered the best five recent religious books. Such a list from those most competent to give opinions would be interesting to all readers, and the local newspaper would undoubtedly be interested to print such a list. Each year there are books in this list that command real attention and deserve wide lay reading, and retailers will find Religious Book Week an opportune time for such emphasis.

What is Increasing Sales

IN many directions we hear discussions and conjectures as to what may be the underlying causes for the increase in book sales. One recent writer ventured to suggest that it was a fad and that people were buying books and talking about them who had no real understanding of what they were discussing or reading. This would seem to be, in the opinion of most of those on the floors of bookstores, an explanation not backed by the intimate knowledge of the new reading public.

Some echo of this discussion and perhaps some answer to it is conveyed in a recent newspaper heading,

TRYING TO FIND WHAT'S FILLING COLLEGES

"Presidents and other educators in New England colleges have been trying to find out why the American youth has been pressing in large numbers at the gates of these institutions to constitute freshman classes which set new records in many cases."

They give among the factors responsible for the increase "the war-time demonstration of the value of higher education, the quickening of interest in all questions of international moment, and the hard times in business."

Proposes Trade Amalgamation

A SUGGESTION that the separate organizations of publishers and retailers should be brought into more close relation is the thought contained in a letter which has just been sent out by B. W. Huebsch to his fellow members in the American Booksellers' Association. Mr. Huebsch says:

"The retail book-trade in the United States is making up for lost time. Signs of new life are everywhere apparent, and the business of distributing books is becoming a factor in American life.

"A closer understanding between producers and distributors is essential; bookselling and publishing are like two arms on one body. In my opinion, the enterprise in which we are engaged will find its best development only when the booksellers and publishers are united in one organization, each group continuing to function independently in those matters that concern only its particular branch.

"The publishers are perfecting their organization; the booksellers are already strong, but it behooves them to get every retailer into the Association. Hence this suggestion that you co-operate with the membership committee of the American Booksellers' Association.

"Whatever you do for the Association you do for authors and publishers as well as for retailers; all concerned with books have a common interest."

Where To Start A Bookshop

IN connection with their efforts to continue the healthy progress that has been made in the starting of new bookstores, the National Association of Book Publishers have made a canvass thru traveling men for suggestions as to what cities would make the best area for new enterprises. Such a ballot gives valuable information to work from when inquiries come in as to good locations. The Association has ready a new pamphlet on "The Successful Bookshop" as well as a previous one on "Starting a Book Department" and material on bookstore finance and circulating libraries.

It is impossible, of course, to print a list without realizing that no informal ballot can accurately represent the relative needs of various cities and it is possible that votes might have been cast in some instances which were intended to indicate that some specific type of bookstore was needed rather than a new general bookstore which might compete with one which is already recognised as doing good work. The city of Newark was many times mentioned in these ballots as it was last year in a similar ballot conducted by the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, but within a month a new bookshop has been started there. In Brooklyn as in Newark there are two large department stores, and the ballots probably meant that another type of general book business might also be successful.

There is quite a large emphasis on Southern cities, such as Jacksonville, New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Tulsa and Mobile. The list printed includes only those cities that received several mentions in the vote, but the ballot contained a wide range of other suggestions. At no time in book-trade history have so many new bookshops been started as in 1921, and there is every reason to believe that the movement will continue and spread.

It has been a marked peculiarity of the recent entrants into the field that few of them came from the established bookstores, but instead have entered the arena from professional or college life. As the ventures have proved successful, it seems to indicate that bookselling is a field in which intelligence can be somewhat a substitute for experience when experience is not easily obtainable.

On Whose Shelves are these Books Reposing?

By C. L. Cannon

Chief of Acquisition Division of the New York Public Library

WHY is it so difficult to find out-of-print American books? This question forces itself upon a librarian who has tried unsuccessfully, over a period of two years, to pick up in the second-hand book trade such popular American authors as Joel Chandler Harris, Frank Norris or Edward Eggleston. Apparently, also, an out-of-print book need not have been published ten or fifteen years ago to be unavailable; a brief three or four years seems sufficient. It is accurate to go further, and say that once gone from the publisher's shelves, many volumes apparently vanish. Of course this complete disappearance is apparent and not real. Copies, plenty of them, must still be in existence; they may be found in the stocks of second-hand dealers if one is inclined to spend the time to hunt them out. But such time-consuming methods are impossible for the librarian, in view of the large number of replacements needed, and he must, of necessity, rely upon second-hand dealers and book-hunters to supply his wants.

Why, then, are these wants not more readily supplied? Considerable inquiry leads to the conclusion that the chief obstacle is lack of interest on the part of the dealer himself. There are a number of widely known mediums in which lists of books wanted are advertised. All dealers are familiar with the lists printed in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY. Yet advertisements there bring in only a portion of the titles listed. The advance in the cost of carrying on the second-hand business seems to be the fundamental difficulty. It has forced the second-hand dealer to economize. The cost of printing catalogs, rents, clerical help, and supplies make a higher percentage of profit necessary on stock turnover, and, since the prices of ordinary out-of-print books cannot be advanced as rapidly as costs justify, the dealer is in a way to lose money. His defensive move in the face of this situation, according to a number of New York dealers, is to concentrate on "books with a profit" such as Americana, local history, rare first editions, etc., and pay correspondingly less attention to miscellaneous classes. When the thoroughness of organization of the British second-hand book trade is called to his attention, with comment on the ease with which an out-of-print book can ordinarily be secured in Great Britain, the American dealer replies that the cost of his help prevents the minute classification and listing which constantly bring out titles of old books in England and reduces the number of "scarce" volumes. Some dealers will say frankly that they do not know what books they have in stock, and that they throw all want-lists in the waste basket when received.

There is a suspicion in the mind of the librarian, at times, that some book dealers rely too much on the demand of customers who come to their place of business, as an indication of what books are popular, and not enough on first hand information of their value as permanent literature. This would seem to account for the large stock and heavy advertising of erotica, business, and "inspirational" books and the scarcity (judging by the response) of the early volumes of almost any prominent contemporary American author, Hamlin Garland, Upton Sinclair, Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, for example. Jack London was living three years ago, and his books are favorably known in Europe, yet his "Kempton Wace Letters," published by Macmillan in 1903, seems to have passed out of existence.

A similar absence of interest in library business is indicated by an almost total lack of response to requests for books in certain classes of literature, journalism, for instance.

The book dealer may be justified by business conditions, but it is certainly awkward for the librarian whose replacement expenditures constitute no mean part of his total book budget. Are there not enough libraries purchasing miscellaneous classes of books to make handling this material profitable? If public libraries have to go to the book dealer with their list of wants, instead of his bringing his stock to them in his catalogs, should not the dealer find it profitable to classify and arrange his stock and to search want-lists? Publishers will tell them that there is no steady seller to compare with a well-written book that out-lasts its generation. That is why Stephen Crane's stories are being reprinted, and welcome news it is to libraries, which have tried vainly to get his books at second-hand.

Getting the Books Wanted

THE increased interest in book collecting and the importance of a systematic means of communication between those who want books and those who have them give increasing importance to the Books Wanted columns of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, which reach every second-hand and new book dealer in the country. It has been the report of many who check thru these columns in order to quote books that it is much easier to read the lists of those booksellers who arrange their material in systematic order and much easier to turn back and find the entry after it is once passed.

Many of the lists sent in for this department are in very confused shape, and the straightening out for publication is not easy. We have selected and reprinted in facsimile samples of Books Wanted lists that come to us in what, from the point of view of the printers and in the opinion of the users of the list, is the best possible form, alphabetical by author, followed by title and publisher and date, if known, especially the date if a particular edition is wanted.

Best Sellers

THE newly invigorated book page in the Cleveland Plain Dealer has made a point of reporting the best sellers as given by the bookstores of that city. In a column headed "Best Sellers in Cleveland," it is printing lists of six fiction and six non-fiction titles, from Burrows Brothers, Halle Brothers, Korner & Wood, Richard Laukhuff and The May Company. From the five lists they then print a consolidated list. Booksellers are thus put in competition with each other as to what type of book shall reach the top of their particular list, a new feature in retail competition and publicity.

When Do Movies Sell Books?

THE ORIGINAL PAINTINGS FOR THE MILTON BRADLEY EDITION OF "THE THREE MUSKETEERS" WERE STRIKINGLY PLACED AND FINELY 'LLUMINATED IN A WINDOW DISPLAY OF L. BAMBERGER & COMPANY, NEWARK, WHEN DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS WAS SHOWING.

EVER since the moving picture took its prominent place in the public's regard, and especially since the producers began, naturally to turn to books for their titles and plots, there has been continuing discussion in the book-trade as to the effect of film display on the sale of the book. That it has brought book titles and famous stories to the attention of the tremendous new group of potential readers is unquestionable, but what has always been difficult to estimate is just how the bookseller could best connect with this interest and with what type of titles the connection was most profitably made.

It has been often suggested that booksellers should obtain concessions from the theaters and have the books on sale as the performance was over. One bookseller, who tried this, however, found that the sales were negligible. Possibly it was because the particular picture showing at that time left people completely satisfied with their knowledge of the plot and its development; possibly, also, people coming out were hurrying away to get home and, also, had the common feeling that, having spent what they had planned for the evening's diversion, further expenditure was not in order.

Booksellers have seemed to find that people have been as likely to buy the book next day as they were at the very time the show was out. It has also seemed as tho the bookseller who runs a magazine stand and variety store and picks up the less established type of book readers, was more likely to have the movie fan looking over his counters than the more dignified and complete bookstore.

There is undoubtedly a great difference as to the amount of demand that will follow from the filming of titles that might at first seem to have equal chance to produce sales. The filming of "Treasure Island" undoubtedly produced a wave of book buying thruout the country, and yet on many other adventure stories only a ripple of interest is aroused. The "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" brought about a tremendous increase in sale, and these instances could be multiplied.

Perhaps no title has ever had more effect on sales than the production by Douglas Fairbanks of "The Three Musketeers," and every publisher who had an edition or who could plan a new edition has found that the film created a great bookstore demand which has distributed thousands of books, and the demand seems to be spreading to every section.

College Text Books Again

By M. C. Godkin

FREDERICK DEANE HARTMAN'S timely discussion in the College Text Book Situation deserves widespread consideration from publishers, dealers, and college professors, as well as others who may be directly interested in supplying or securing college books.

That the present situation could be improved will be generally conceded; that conditions are as bad as pictured by Mr. Hartman will be questioned. There will be considerable dissection from his point of view by American publishers, dealers, and college men, but this is natural inasmuch as his experience has been in Canada. Nevertheless the situation here demands analysis and remedial measures where weakness is discovered.

To comment in detail on Mr. Hartman's statements is unnecessary. In general it will suffice to say that the ideas are suggestive if not altogether practical from the American point of view and that Mr. Hartman has recognized and pointed out those local conditions which would possibly interfere with their introduction. It is extremely unlikely that any large educational publisher, and Mr. Hartman agrees, or that professors in any considerable numbers would hold the opinions held by his characters. It would seem that Canadian firms have not perfected their educational institutions to any considerable extent. Perhaps the incentive is lacking.

The present day need is for:

(1) A uniform system for the distribution of textbooks for examination.

(2) A method for consistently advising the publisher of the texts adopted in each course and an approximate number required each semester. This information to be supplied some time in advance of the time the texts will be required.

(3) Close co-operation between faculty and dealer, faculty and publisher and dealer and publisher.

The promotion work must be left to the publisher. It is unreasonable and futile to consider otherwise. Reasons are manifold. There are approximately 750 colleges. Allowing each its special dealer (in actual practice there is more than one dealer to a college) it will be seen that if a dealer is to be properly equipped to promote the sale of the educational publications each dealer will have to enlarge his staff and stock sufficiently to handle the publications of over 500 publishers. To know the respective merits of each publisher's texts and their proper place in the field of education would be a Herculean and impossible task, involving an expenditure few dealers could assume. The Educational Departments of the publishing houses are eminently better fitted to ascertain the suitability of their publications to college needs, and to see that educators in those subjects are kept in touch with new texts, than the dealer.

That the prices of textbooks are now near their highest level is due, of course to conditions induced by the War. But War conditions are slowly being corrected and in the near future the trend of textbook prices should be downward. But prices will continue to be too high until educators realize that, for every book received by them gratis for examination, and not ultimately adopted, the cost is indirectly added to the cost of the book in those schools in which it is adopted. Assuming that a new Latin text is announced and that 290 copies are distributed free of charge, it means that the cost of those copies must be added to the cost of copies sold. It is not unusual for a teacher to receive from ten to twenty copies of various text-books, when the introduction of only one can be made. In some cases the books are thrust upon him, and in some cases he asks for them. Multiplying that waste by about 750 colleges and considering the numerous departments in each college and the number of instructors in each department, the tremendous waste can easily be calculated and it can be seen why books are too high.

Free copies for the asking is one of those old customs, or habits, which many professors still adhere to and many publishers follow but which in time will be discontinued to the benefit of the student and professor. On the other hand, for a teacher to be required to pay for each text that he desires to consider would be grossly unfair and impossible. The solution lies in sending copies for examination billed and subject to return or payment if not introduced. If adopted the courtesy of a desk copy should still hold good.

As for dealer co-operation let me state a specific instance in which this important factor was altogether lacking. A professor has signified his intention of using about 700 copies of a text in September. The college book store was notified in June. The publishing house having been advised of the situation pressed the bookstore for a confirmation of the order. The order was finally received during the latter part of August. Upon investigation it was found that the bookstore had deliberately held the order back in expectation of lower prices. Such a procedure is inexcusable. It is unbusinesslike and places too heavy a burden upon the publisher. In such an instance a dealer would be entitled to a rebate had lower prices been put in force between the time the order was placed and the date the books were needed by the college. In the above case the professor showed a business-like and considerate manner; the dealer, the reverse.

Except in rare instances the professor knows what texts he will need long in advance of the opening of school. He should be urged to place orders as promptly as possible in order to give the publisher ample time to fill requirements. At the time the local dealer is advised the publisher should be informed so that the matter can promptly be followed up should any delay ensue.

It should be remembered by both the dealer and publisher that the average college professor is not a business man, that he is extremely busy with class work and administrative work and that he should be relieved as much as possible of the many distracting details which he is not equipped to handle. The dealer, who is close at hand and in close touch with conditions should co-operate more closely with the publisher, keeping him informed of requirements and changes promptly.

In closing it would be well to emphasize that the function of the publisher, broadly speaking, is to publish and promote the sale of books; the professor should examine and promptly acknowledge receipt of books and place orders as early as possible; the dealer as a middle man should co-operate more closely with the publisher for their mutual benefit.

Darwin in the Textbooks

WITH the general stirring of public interest in education and a keener intellectual curiosity among all classes, there has come, also, a sharper questioning of what goes into our text-books, especially by those who fear that the youth may be directed into wrong paths in the state-supported institutions of learning. In Kentucky, the whole state has been stirred up over a bill that would prohibit the teaching of the theory of the evolution of man in the university of Kentucky or any other educational institution depending upon the state for funds. The fight has been apparently fanned by having William Jennings Bryan brought into the arena for a two weeks' campaign attack on evolution. In Mr. Bryan's most widely circulated book, "The Prince of Peace," there is a paragraph often quoted which sharply attacks Darwinism. Educators thruout the country have seen in this an attack on free discussion, and the charge and counter-charge are being printed in long columns in Kentucky papers.

Book Expositions

THE French "Cercle de la Librairie" (book-trade association) held an exhibit of holiday books in December. No books were sold but those wishing to buy the books exhibited were referred to their own booksellers. In connection with this exhibit it is interesting to read the address made on this subject by M. P. Gillon at the Book Convention of 1917.

"However opinions may vary about the value of exhibits," says M. Gillon, "they have one unquestionable advantage; they stir up healthy competition among the participants and thus contribute strongly to professional progress. There can be no exhibit, however limited, that does not bring to light some innovations that suggest new ideas to the observers and awaken in them the will for renewed effort.

"But exhibits have still another advantage, by attracting the attention of people to the carefully chosen objects, and by inducing them to come and examine them at their leisure, they accustom them to show their preferences and to point out, after a fashion, to the producer the path that he ought to follow. By its visits and its purchases the public encourages and stimulates the exhibitors and thus contributes toward the progress of their industry. Therefore exhibitions have been increasing during late years. The tendency is away, however, from the universal exhibits of former years, toward special shows limited to one industry or group of industries: as for instance, automobile shows, furniture exhibits, etc.

"The book industry itself has been the object of many exhibitions, but as these included everything having to do with books they called for big halls and costly fixtures, which made it impractical to hold new ones as often as were needful. This inconvenience can perhaps be avoided by arranging frequent special exhibits in place of the general ones; no commodity lends itself better to this scheme than the book which is all the time undergoing modifications of various kinds on account of the numerous collaborators who make contributions to its production.

"Besides, in the book industry, only that part having to do with machinery needs much room. No palace is required to show specimens of paper, of printing, of design, of photographs, of bindings and stitchings. If, in addition, these exhibits include talks given by specialists, the general public will be educated in its taste, and initiated, little by little into the various characteristics of typographic art, learning to distinguish the merits of a fine edition, and taking pleasure individually in enriching its library with works judiciously chosen."

Speakers Announced

MRS. ALICE DUER MILLER, author of "Come Out of the Kitchen," "The Charm School," "Beauty and the Bolshevik," "Ladies Must Live," and other popular books, and Charles Caldwell Dobie, author of "The Blood-red Dawn" are the speakers for the meeting of the Women's National Book Association, to be held at the Children's Book Shop, Thursday evening, February 16th at 8 o'clock sharp.

The Society of Bookmen

WITH a broad program of interest and an inclusiveness in membership, this season has seen the launching in London of "The Society of Bookmen," which owes its start largely to Hugh Walpole and to his belief that all those having a common interest in books and book distribution should be better acquainted and should confer occasionally on the problems that are connected with the distribution of books.

The idea for this Society seems to have originated more or less at the meeting of the Associated Booksellers last year in York, where Hugh Walpole and Sidney Pawling of Heinemann's made speeches to the conference. During the fall, informal meetings of book people were held, and the first general meeting was at Ye Olde Cocke Tavern in Fleet Street on November 23rd, with G. A. E. Marshall in the chair. At this meeting, neither Mr. Walpole, nor Mr. Pawling, who had taken so much of the initiative, were able to be present, but organization was completed along the lines suggested by the Committee.

The name, "The Society of Bookmen" was adopted after several suggestions had been made. The purpose, as outlined in the program, was stated to be "a society for the advancement of literature by the cooperation of the various branches of the book-trade." It was agreed that future meetings should be held at the Howard de Walden Club, 16 Weymouth Street, Portland Place, and the subscription was set at one and a half guineas for town members and one guinea for country members. Those present at the opening meeting were:

J. D. Beresford	Leonard Parsons.
H. Clifford	Cecil Palmer.
Sidney Dark.	J. H. Quinn.
Nigel de Grey.	F. Richardson.
Frank Denny.	David Roy.
John Drinkwater.	D. J. Rice.
St. John Ervine.	Frank Swinnerton.
Kenneth Kinninmont.	Harold Shaylor.
E. C. Kyte.	Stanley Unwin.
M. A. Marston.	J. G. Wilson.
W. B. Maxwell.

The general purposes of the Society and the way the membership is to be developed is seen in the thirteen people named at the first meeting to be invited to join the Society:

Artist: William Nicholson.

Authors: Norman Davey, Hamilton Fyfe and W. J. Tusser.

Booksellers: Basil Blackwood of Oxford, J. M. Fisher of R. Grant & Sons, Edinburgh, and H. B. Saxton of Nottingham.

Journalists: James Heddle of the Hulton Press, James Bone of the Manchester Guardian and W. Stewart of the Glasgow Herald.

Librarian: Stanley Jast of the Manchester Public Library.

Publisher: H. Jackson of MacLehose Jackson & Company of Glasgow.

Literary Agents: Raymond Savage of Curtis Brown Ltd. and John Clark.

The group is limited in membership in order to get well under way, but it is prophesied that it will grow as soon as the purpose is fully appreciated.

Bookplate Exhibit

THE American Bookplate Society is now holding its Seventh Annual Exhibition of Contemporary Bookplates at the National Arts Club, 15 Gramercy Park, New York. The exhibit is open to the public each week day from ten to six and Sunday from two to six, until February 26th. After that time it will be at various libraries and art museums thruout the United States. The itinerary will include Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Toledo, Chicago, Kansas City, San Francisco, Seattle, Spokane and Portland.

The present exhibit is the largest one of its kind ever shown and comprises two hundred and twenty-one designs by seventy-five artists. Practically every civilized country is represented.

The jury of awards comprised Charles B. Falls, president of the Guild of Free-Lance Artists; Frederick W. Goudy, the typographical expert, and president of the American Institute of Graphic Arts; and William Edgar Fisher, bookplate designer of note and president of the American Bookplate Society.

The judges awarded Certificates of Merit to Frank G. House of London; to Carl S. Junge, of Oak Park; to Edmund H. Garrett, of Boston; to A. G. Law Samson, of Edinburgh; to Henry J. Haley, of London; and a special award to Oscar T. Blackburn, of Minneapolis.

"A family without a library, a mind without culture thru the printed page, must limp thru life handicapped for everything but the most menial occupations."

—Fleming H. Revell, New York City, in New Era Magazine.

A notable English bookseller, whose store is in one of the most fashionable seaside places of England, bemoaned the fact the other day that, while bookselling had not gone to the dogs, he deeply regretted that people were not buying books as they used to do in the "old days." He instanced the fact by pointing out that, in the case of one particularly good client, he had noticed that at Christmas, for the previous years, his order had averaged something like fifty dollars in value, but for this last holiday season his account totaled only five dollars! And this is not an isolated instance. It does not mean that people don't want to buy books. It means, here, that they can't buy books, because the demands in the way of taxes, school fees, living, etc., are almost ruinous. These regular clients leave the bookshops with great regret, and are looking forward to the time when they may browse happily over the bookshelves and contentedly buy as their taste and spirit move them, but until that time comes, their bookless winter of sorrow must remain. This mental condition has one very real obvious danger, the habitus may pass, and other and more sensational expenditures may get a very big look-in, as the saying goes.

Spring plans are growing apace, and there is promise of much activity. Already preliminary lists are printed, and salesmen are on the road with their bags. The prospects are hopeful. Confidence is slowly coming back, and when the public get into that condition of mind, bookselling always benefits; not that last year was bad—it was really good, taking all the bad currents into consideration. Obviously, we are a long way yet from the normal. There are lots of good things coming, in the way of non-fiction, especially. Unfortunately, a general election is threatened, and that means propaganda with an infernally large P, plenty of literature of the free kind, and everybody will be full of speech and argument. Papers will increase their sales, and books will suffer. Alas, that it should be so. As soon as the date is fixed—and L. G. is determined upon it—then the important books will be held over until the passionate time has passed, and it will be a terrific election this time.

Our Anglophile Publishers

A LETTER in a fall number of the Literary Review comments sharply on the attitude of American publishers showing especial favoritism towards English critics as follows:

"But if we are to have a national literature, will some one kindly tell me in what way the attitude of our university and college instruction contributes to it? The whole scholastic caste in America seems hell bent on exterminating American individuality. And again, if, as is undeniable to any careful observer, the mixture of races here is surely producing a spoken language of our own and distinct from any other, will some one kindly tell me why our book publishers insist upon loading down their pages with alien spelling? Why must they spell color as if it were pronounced 'coloor,' and why do they thrust that foolish and superfluous 'u' into every word where it is not needed? This is the British orthography, not the American. I have had more than one fight with publishers over this in the case of my own books. When I have asked why they wished to disfigure their pages with a foreign language, the reply was always the same:

"'Because English critics will not give a favorable review to a book with American spelling.'

"I guess that tells the story.

"Suppose these timid souls to be right and English critics to be of this pristine state of intellectual development, what of it? Why are favorable reviews by English critics more vital to us than favorable reviews by Dutch, Swiss, or Scandinavian critics? If this really represents the slavish attitude of the American publisher, I should fancy the excellent plea you make for national individuality and expression might bump into some practical obstacles. Yet I can't imagine that Messrs. Anderson, Mencken, or Lewis or Miss Canfield are the poorer in flesh, spirit, or purse because some solemn guy in Fleet Street that knows not their aims, subjects, nor language does not like their work. If they are wise, they thank God and go on."

At the Birth of a History

IN the very widespread discussion, which has recently been taking place in our literary papers, as to the functions of a critic, there has been frequent emphasis on the constructive value of criticism, many writers insisting that literature could hardly be expected to flourish without a body of intelligent criticism to check and lead. That critics may be party to the very first creative impulses which develop into literary successes, as well as being among those present and alert when the product is complete, is the indication from the only recently told story of the beginning of the idea of "The Outline of History."

In the winter after the war, a group of men met at dinner at the Reform Club in London. Among them were Professor Henry Seidel Canby, Editor of the Literary Review of the New York Evening Post, and Professor John W. Cunliffe of Columbia. The talk naturally turned toward the Anglo-American relations and of the importance of increasing mutual understanding. Professor Canby turned to H. G. Wells and said, "Why do you not write for us, Mr. Wells, an Anglo-Saxon history, covering all of the English-speaking countries and commonwealths as one historical theme, the subject is one of very present interest and you of all people are the one that could make it vital and important?"

"I might do that," said Mr. Wells, "but one difficulty is that from these English-speaking countries I must go back into the countries from which this race sprang, back into Europe."

"Well, if that is necessary, then why not go back into Europe and start from the racial sources."

"But," said Wells, "if I go back that step, I must go still further back to the very beginning of man or to the beginning of life on this planet."

"Very well, then, carry the thread back to the very beginning, the idea becomes more and more interesting."

"If you do that," said Professor Cunliffe, breaking in, "you will have a history that every high school in the United States will use as a textbook."

"How many high school students have you?" asked Wells.

"Perhaps 100,000."

"That is a good audience to begin on," said Mr. Wells.

Three years later, when Professor Canby saw Mr. Wells in this country, the author's greeting was, "Well, Mr. Canby, you were one of those that were in at the birth of 'The Outline of History.'"

Publishers' Advertising

IN the Printers' Ink of recent date, the Chicago Tribune carried a full page advertisement under the heading "Can Books Be Sold?" The text is interesting and runs as follows:

CAN BOOKS BE SOLD?

The average publisher issues scores of books each year, scatters half-hearted support among them, and hopes that one or more may catch the public fancy and be bought in quantities. He does not sell his wares as other manufacturers do. He gambles on issuing something that the public will take away from him.

Each year he repeats this process, abandoning books which showed promise in order to bring out new failures.

After investigation, the Business Survey of the Chicago Tribune has come to the conclusion that books can be sold and that advertising can be an invaluable aid in selling them. Book publishers have run announcements in the Tribune, but (except in the case of subscription books) have never advertised their wares in this market. But it can be done—profitably.

We invite discussion with any publisher who wishes to substitute modern merchandising methods for the lottery element in his business.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The World's Greatest Newspaper

Whether there will be many publishers who come forward to accept the invitation is another matter, but it can be prophesied that if they do not it will not be from any aversion to discussing new ideas. Publishers in their advertising are evolutionists rather than revolutionists. Never a month goes by but an advertising man fresh from successes in the talcum or cigarette fields looks over the book world and makes a quick estimate of its shortcomings. Many obtain their opportunity to try new ideas and some perhaps have found that all that they prophesied of what could be done with the public could not be quickly accomplished.

The publishers would perhaps have more confidence in one who prophesied less and approached this really difficult task of book distribution with a little more modesty. Few people outside of the book-trade realize that the advertising appropriations on books are a much larger percentage per dollar of sale than that of almost any other nationally advertised commodity. Expenditures of from ten to fifteen per-cent of the net wholesale receipts on a book are common. On many other commodities we hear of five per-cent appropriations, and three per-cent is more common. Publishers looking at their year's business may find that they have had an advertising appropriation of five, six or seven per-cent of their whole business, but an analysis of this shows that this advertising has been chiefly connected with new books, which means that these titles have carried almost double that rate. With this heavy percentage is it possible for a metropolitan paper of high-price lineage to make revolutionary increase in the amount of returns?

The Chicago Tribune believes that, instead of issuing books continuously, selling campaigns should be concentrated on a few titles. But it may be that by this literature would suffer and only the books of greatest popular appeal could be advertised at all. This would be more like the condition in the movies where only the film which can attract an audience at any cross street is considered by the producers. The publishers are perhaps not ready yet to make that their rule. The Tribune also suggests that current advertisements with too heavy percentage of cost are merely announcements, and the argument would be that three or four hundred line space at a dollar a line would be a little more to the point. If any paper would be bold enough to try that under guaranteed results it might learn some of the things that book publishers long ago learned. Book distribution is steadily improving, and many new types of promotion are constantly being tried. Every new suggestion should get a hearing, but those who suddenly survey the field from the outside ought to take a little time to walk round and read the inscriptions on some of the gravestones of departed hopes.

One final comment suggests itself, and that is whether the Tribune, which is presumably trying to sell space to the publishers, is itself an efficient advertiser trying to merchandise expensive space to a small group of established firms. If one has a constructive idea to present is it the best salesmanship to pin the possibilities of selling it on truculently worded and only partly thought thru copy? When it comes to criticising advertising campaigns, we venture to mark down this page ad. of the Chicago Tribune as almost wasted space, not because it does not contain some truth or because the publishers are not keenly interested in new opportunities, but because it states old arguments in so unconvincing a form.

War Fiction Booklist

A REFERENCE book of current importance to booksellers and libraries is the list entitled "European War Fiction in English and Personal Narratives" compiled by Loleta I. Dawson and Marion Davis Huntting, and published by F. W. Faxon & Company. It is a list of 320 titles of fiction with author index and supplementary list of personal narratives. The notes give information needed as to the placing of the story and narratives.

The 1922 Toy Fair

THE 1922 Toy Fair opened most auspiciously at the Hotels Imperial and Breslin, New York, on February 6th. It is a colorful exhibition, and includes every kind of toy for children, together with books for little people.

While there are not as many firms from the book world represented as last year, still those who are present have most attractive displays, bringing to the front many new ideas for the coming season.

Hurst and Company are showing books for boys and girls for all ages attractively jacketed in snappy style. Instead of the dull black and white effects which have been so long in vogue on children's books in this line, they are now dressed in colorful and picturesque wrappers, which should make good window and counter displays. L. M. Levy is in attendance in the Hotel Imperial, Room 244.

The Nourse Company, 114 East 23rd Street, New York, is showing a very wide selection of Occupational and Something-to-do Books, together with a most artistic line of Magic Paint books. It is interesting to note that these books carry a real idea for the improvement of children's minds, and there are many items in paper-folding, painting, and cut-outs which have reflected the work and plans of kindergarteners. There is an absence of books for careless daubing, every one of them presents something which will make the child appreciate form and color. There are articles which will be of interest to the boy as well as to the girl. One of the outstanding titles on this list for older girls is "Natalie, a Garden Scout" by Lillian Elizabeth Roy. This book is one of a series which has been endorsed by the Girl Scouts of America. L. G. Nourse is in charge, at Room 244, Hotel Imperial.

The E. M. Leavens Company, Inc., of Rochester, N. Y., has a large display of toy books and cut-outs. Among the items are new titles in the Wearever Toy Books. These are the Story of Peter Pan, with verses by M. O. Munson, and The Tale of Peter Rabbit by Beatrix Potter. This series is made of very heavy, untearable paper, with brightly colored illustrations and sells for 25 cents each. There are also paper dolls, with bright and stylish wardrobes. This company is showing the Collins Clear Type Bibles and Testaments together with The Bijou Shakespeare, 6 volumes bound in leather and boxed in a leather case. They are all well bound volumes and the E. M. Leavens Company are the sole agents for this line in America. Miss H. J. Pfanstiehl is in charge in Room 250, Hotel Imperial.

The Platt and Munk Co. of 118 East 25th Street, New York, has one of the largest and brightest collections of play books for children. These include painting, stencil, and cut-outs, the latter being particularly attractive inasmuch as they are of a highly educational type, flowers and birds in their true colors. These are made in America and have to do with American natural history so that the child may know at once thru play the names of the birds and flowers. There is also to be found here a "Bundle of Children's Stories," a set of ten little books in a box which sells for 50 cents. Arnold Munk is in charge in Room 245, Hotel Imperial.

In Room 233 Hotel Imperial, Ben Spero is in charge of the display of The Saalfeld Publishing Company of Akron, Ohio. Among the novelties shown is a Peter Rabbit Balloon Set. This is the story of Peter told on six balloons inclosed with the book. The Animal Fun Book is another novelty, made like a slate with black pages, to be written on with white crayon, which is supplied. There is also a new set by David Cory, "Little Indian Series" which is complete in three volumes, and sells for $1.50.

The Whitman Publishing Company, of Racine, Wisconsin, is to be found in Room 317, Hotel Imperial with S. E. Lowe in charge. It is showing reprints of popular juveniles, cartoons by Briggs and stationery for little children with their favorite characters from story-books printed in color at the top of each sheet.

Charles Conrath is looking after the display of books for the littlest children which are published by Sam'l Gabriel Sons and Company. These books, mostly paper and linen, are in Room 315, Hotel Imperial.

The Satler Manufacturing Company of Baltimore, in Room 209, Hotel Imperial, is showing a full line of educational games, combined with books for small children. L. Goldie is in charge.

At the Hotel Breslin in Rooms 610-612 is the exhibit of M. A. Donohue and Company of Chicago, with William Hamersley in charge.

Charles E. Graham and Company, of Newark, N. J., is exhibiting at the Hotel Breslin, Rooms 710-712, with C. E. Graham in charge.

All thru the exhibition one encounters a spirit of optimism for the coming year, and that added to the fact that nearly every publisher represented is quoting prices from twenty-five to thirty-three and a third percent less than those listed since the beginning of the war, seems to point to a rosy book year for 1922. That there were no books of German manufacture shown, is another interesting point, and as a whole the books for the littlest ones are made along educational lines, especially where occupational items are concerned.

The Fair will close on March 11th.

The Traveling Salesman

AN APPRECIATION

"WHEN I was a boy the traveling man seemed a personage no less important than a visiting prince," says the Saturday Evening Post. "When he came to our town with his trunks and cases, the loafers about the depot followed him to the general store to share in his distribution of cigars and listen to his large talk of distant places. I cannot remember whether his city clothes or suave superiority inspired the greater awe. He had a great fund of new stories and joined heartily in the laughter they provoked. Arguments that had been left hanging in the air against the day of his arrival were settled for all time by his decision, and his opinions concerning political matters were accepted as the words of an oracle. When he had finished his business a guard of honor accompanied him to the train and he always waited for the last coach and swung on as a young brakeman does.

"Salesmanship is no longer the happy-go-lucky matter it was. The modern salesman is an expert, a student, a psychologist. His mission is to sell goods, but he accomplishes his purpose by rendering service. He is a counselor and friend. A postcard will bring him from a distant city and, once arrived, he will study a shop or store, take it apart to find the rusty cogs, readjust it to fit a modern plan, and be gone with an order for the machines or devices or goods his house has for sale. He is the handmaiden of efficiency, an apostle of pep, bringing light into dark places and spreading the gospel of progress.

"Now the salesman keeps fit. He needs a level head. He is a responsible citizen, and his place on the payroll depends upon sound judgment and an unblemished character. He is, oftentimes, the ambassador of a great institution, dignified by the reputation of a firm that counts honor its chief asset.

"Traveling men are good citizens. Few men in other occupations are so well qualified for self-government. The traveling man knows his country. He understands its needs, its virtues, its faults. He meets many men with many ideas, reads much, debates much, and from the random grist that comes to his mill makes for himself a standard of citizenship and a conception of good government that are without bias or prejudice or the narrowness that is the penalty of restricted horizons.

"A government by traveling men would be a sensible government, without waste, delay, subterfuge, or petty bickerings. America loses much because so many of her best citizens are so frequently disfranchised by their occupation."

An Uncorrected Galley

SELLING ON COMMISSION

Cohen was a local salesman for a New York woolen concern. The depression in business being serious, he was willing to go a little out of the way for an order. One day, in a spirit that reflected recklessness as well as hope, he invited a prospective buyer out to dine.

The guest picked up the menu, studied it, and ordered from soup to nuts. The waiter turned to Cohen.

"What will you have, sir?"

Cohen despairingly replied: "Gimme tea and toast."

From across the table came the mildly surprised query of his friend: "What's the matter, Cohen, on a diet?"

"No. On commission."

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE

The man had just informed the Pullman agent that he wanted a Pullman berth.

"Upper or lower?" asked the agent.

"What's the difference?" asked the man.

"A difference of fifty cents in this case," replied the agent. "The lower is higher than the upper. The higher price is for the lower. If you want it lower you'll have to go higher. We sell the upper lower than the lower. In other words, the higher the lower. Most people don't like the upper altho it is lower on account of being higher. When you occupy an upper you have to get up to go to bed and get down when you get up. You can have the lower if you pay higher. The upper is lower than the lower because it is higher. If you are willing to go higher, it will be lower."

But the poor man had fainted.—Epworth Herald.

Publishers' Output in 1921

OWING to an error in the make-up of our Annual Summary Number, January 28th, one-third of the list of publishers failed to appear on page 193, which gave the total number of books that each house had issued in 1921. The following should be considered as a supplement. The publisher's totals include every title which is sent to the office, can be traced thru announcement lists or is printed on the Library of Congress cards:

Quebec Interested in Authorship

TO devote a session to the consideration of how best to encourage the development of a native literature was the somewhat unique experience of the members of the Quebec Legislature last week and the question arises, whether it can be paralleled in the legislative halls of any other province or state on the continent.

The government thru the Provincial Secretary, Hon. Athanase David, introduced and passed a bill providing for the establishment for at least three years of annual literary and scientific competition. To furnish prizes, a sum of $5,000 is to be appropriated annually out of the consolidated revenue fund of the province. Prizes will be available for both English and French literary works dealing with scientific or other subjects, the first prize to be $2,500; the second, $1,500, and the third, $500; the remaining $500 to the grant to be used for traveling and other expenses of the judges. The latter are to be nine in number, including the professors of literature in the universities of Laval, Montreal and McGill and a representative of the Royal Society of Canada, French section.

The preamble of the bill points out that it is desirable to facilitate the publication of the works of authors in the province and to draw public attention to the literary and scientific talents which remain unknown owing to unfavorable circumstances. The belief is expressed that the founding of competitions would further the efforts of authors, would aid men of talent in making themselves known and would stimulate by emulation the taste for literary and scientific work and the desire to promote them in Quebec.

At least half a dozen members of the Legislature took part in the debate on the measure, contributing speeches, which were not only appreciative of the idea but were in themselves evidences of the existence of literary culture and a knowledge of literature among the legislators. Hon. Mr. David, the father of the bill, reviewed the birth and growth of literary effort in Quebec and declared that such a measure as he proposed was a recognition of the fact that on the banks of the St. Lawrence a new civilization had been born, which was continuing the traditions and the work of those which had produced such men as Corneille and Racine on the one hand and of Shakespeare and Byron on the other. He believed the race was destined to be in the country for all time and wished to build for the future. With this end in view, the encouragement of literary effort was necessary.

Other speakers emphasized the need of cultivating the intellectual life of the people, when so much effort was being directed to the development of the materialistic side.

Canadian Sales Tax Changes

IT is probable that some changes of interest to the book-trade will be proposed at the next session of Parliament in connection with the sales tax. At present a manufacturer selling to a wholesaler charges a sales tax of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; a wholesaler selling to a retailer or consumer $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; a manufacturer selling to a retailer or consumer, 3 per cent. On importations, a manufacturer or wholesaler pays $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; a retailer or consumer, 4 per cent.

One change proposed is that sales by manufacturers to wholesalers for resale and sales by wholesalers to other wholesalers for resale shall be exempt and in place thereof that the tax on sales by wholesalers to retailers or consumers be raised to 3 per cent. It is believed that this change would simplify the collection of the tax and would also remove certain other difficulties which have arisen.

Another change suggested has to do with the tax on importations. When a retailer or consumer imports, the tax is 4 per cent.. When a manufacturer or wholesaler imports, the tax is $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., but the latter, when re-selling to the retailer, must charge 3 per cent., thus making a total of $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. It will probably be proposed that the two rates shall be more nearly equalized.

Canadian Bookman Re-organize

THE Canadian Bookman, which has been in a sense the organ of the Canadian Authors' Association, has been taken over by a new company known as the Bookcraft Publishing Co. Professor Bernard K. Sandwell of McGill University, who has been editor since the magazine was established, is president of the new company and continues as editor. Findlay I. Weaver, editor and proprietor of the Canadian Book-Trade Journal, becomes vice-president and managing director. The Book-Trade Journal will be merged with the Bookman as a trade section; circulating exclusively among publishers and booksellers. Harold W. Thompson is secretary-treasurer. The Canadian Bookman, which was originally a quarterly, will now be issued monthly.

THE GEORGE H. DORAN Co. is now representative of the United Council for Missionary Education of Great Britain, and for the Publication Department of The London Missionary Society. This is the society which sent David Livingstone to Africa. As publisher of the Students Christian Movement, Doran will publish immediately, "The Pilgrim," by Professor T. R. Glover, and these three additional titles, "Psychology and the Christian Life," by Pym; "The Universality of Christ," by Temple; "The Divine Initiative," by Mackintosh.

Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

Great stuff, that "Culled from an Auction Cat," by Blumenthal on Jan. 21. I suspect that half the dealers in the old U. S. A. are busy with "addenda." I'll bet that very few of the good things you have published will get so much circulation and so many emendations as this list. No. 17 is a stroke of genius—as a radical, not tired yet, I'll say so.

But, lest we forget, how about a few more?

BUY A BOOK A WEEK

1140 Broadway, N. Y.

Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

Apropos the discussion about "Buy a Book A Week" Campaign:

Going home on the train last night I ran into a neighbor of mine who is connected with the Equitable Life Insurance Company. During our conversation he said he had seen so many advertisements about "Buy a Book a Week" that he had decided this year to do it and since the first of 1922 he has bought one book each week (and one week he bought two). He said he hadn't time to read them yet but the "family is having a good time."

I thought this would interest you so you would know that the hammering about the commercial value of this slogan is not detrimental to the plan. I believe in spite of the argument about commercializing that this is the proper slogan. Yours very truly,

GROSSET & DUNLAP,

P. L. Reed, Manager.

The Literary Year Book

THE new edition of the English "Literary Year Book" is ready and due from the Custom House. The English publishers have announced marked improvements over their effort of last year, and the book includes a great deal of valuable information for the use of publishers, librarians, literary workers and booksellers. Among other features is a list of all literary, dramatic and moving picture agents in England and the United States, a list of literary and news service agencies, a list of literary prizes, a classified list of British and Colonial periodicals and American periodicals, procedures for copyright, English and American, lists of British libraries, learned societies, dramatic and literary societies, a list of five hundred English booksellers, an exhaustive list of pseudonyms. The American market is handled thru the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, and it is expected that orders can be filled by the 10th of February.

Ladies' Night

THE New York Booksellers' League will have a dinner and dance at the Brevoort Hotel on Wednesday February 15. This will be Ladies Night.

Personal

HENRY W. LANGMANN is now connected with the Cornhill Pub. Co. of Boston at its New York office, 7 West 49th St.

SHAW NEWTON is the new advertising manager of the Bookseller and Stationer.

Personal

T. H. SOFIELD, a director of G. P. Putnam's Sons, Ltd., London, and in charge of the antiquarian department, is visiting America for a sojourn of a few weeks.

WILLIAM THOMSON, head of Thomas Nelson & Sons' American branch, sailed for England on Tuesday, February 7th.

Business Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—Goodspeed's Bookshop of 5A Park Street has now opened a second store while keeping the first at the old location. The new branch is at 9a Ashburton Place near the State House and only two blocks away from the present location. The branch will be devoted especially to prints, a business that Goodspeed's has been very largely developing in the past few years, but the activities have now outgrown the space that could be allotted to them at Park Street.

Obituary Notes

LEMUEL W. BANGS

MANY readers of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY read with deep regret the obituary of the late Lemuel W. Bangs in the January 7 issue. London representative of Charles Scribner's Sons for 38 years, he was better known to older members of the trade than to the younger men, but he was everywhere held in the most affectionate regard. In the London Publishers' Circular there appeared the following letter from Gerald Duckworth.

LEMUEL W. BANGS

DEAR MR. MARSTON,—I am sure all publishers and booksellers will hear with very deep regret that Mr. Lemuel W. Bangs died on Thursday, December 15th, in his 82nd year. He was born on April 25th, 1839. Associated with Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, for over 50 years, he came to London and represented the firm for 38 years. He was in active charge except for the last three or four years when Mr. Kingsley came over. I venture to send this note as, besides knowing Mr. Bangs intimately in business when our relations were always of the most cordial, I used to see him continually at the Garrick Club. He was elected a member in 1886, and his great friend and chief, Mr. Charles Scribner, was elected in 1903. He dined at the club most nights, sitting invariably at the same table and we always knew the time at luncheon as, regularly as clockwork, he appeared at 2 o'clock. He was much loved by the members, and everybody called him "The Senator." He wore a peculiar frock-coat made to his own design by Poole, the celebrated tailor of Savile Row, and he had never had the cut altered since he first arrived in London. He had a pretty taste in ties and wore always some choice flower in his buttonhole. "The Senator" had many good stories to tell his friends, and used to present them with cigarettes the size of a cigar. I feel sure that all those who met him both in business and in private will feel a great personality has left us. May we all, as I know he would wish us, raise our glasses to his memory.—Yours sincerely,

GERALD DUCKWORTH.

ARTHUR HOWARD ABENDROTH

ARTHUR HOWARD ABENDROTH, president of the Fitzgerald Publishing Corporation, successors to Dick & Fitzgerald, New York, died on January 30th of heart failure. Mr. Abendroth was for many years manager of the old company at 18 Ann street and after the death of Harris B. Dick he organized the present corporation in which he was active until a few weeks before his death. He was member of the Union League and Players' Club and a Veteran of the 7th Regiment.

JOHN BUTLER YEATS

JOHN BUTLER YEATS, painter and essayist, father of William Butler Yeats, the Irish poet and Jack B. Yeats, also an artist, died February 4, in New York City. Mr. Yeats was born in 1839 at Tullylish, Ireland. He was graduated with honors from Trinity College, Dublin, and a year after being admitted to the bar gave up the law for art. He knew most of the prominent Irishmen of the last forty years. Since 1910 Mr. Yeats had made his home in this country. He was a frequent contributor to magazines of articles on literary and art subjects.

JAMES B. PINKER

JAMES B. PINKER, literary and dramatic agent, of Talbot House, London, died February 8 at the Hotel Biltmore of pneumonia developing from influenza. He arrived in the city February 3 on the Aquitania. Mr. Pinker was 58 years old. Among the authors whom he had represented in this country was Henry James, Joseph Conrad, John Galsworthy, Frank Swinnerton and Compton Mackenzie. The intimacy and helpfulness of his relations with men like Joseph Conrad were such that not a few great writers owe much of their public success to him. With him at the time of his death was his 17-year-old daughter, Eeonie, who crossed the ocean with him. Also surviving are his wife and two sons, Eric and Ralph Pinker, the former associated with his father in business.

A. KROCH

The Michigan Avenue Bookseller

A. KROCH first evidenced real interest in books at the age of four. Disgusted at the slow growth of his library, he divided books into chapters and bound the chapters separately and labeled them. At the age of twenty, to avoid going into his father's banking business, he sold his library and with the money bought a ticket to America. For four years he worked in a book shop before he opened his own store at 59 Monroe Street, and after nine years there he moved to Michigan Avenue, one of the first pioneers on the famous boulevard.

The Weekly Record of New Publications

This list aims to be a complete and accurate record of American book publications. Pamphlets will be included only if of special value. Publishers should send copies of all books promptly for annotation and entry, and the receipt of advance copies insures record simultaneous with publication. The annotations are descriptive, not critical; intended to place not to judge the books. Pamphlet material and books of lesser trade interest are listed in smaller type.

The entry is transcribed from title page when the book is sent for record. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. When not specified the binding is cloth.

Imprint date is stated [or best available date, preferably copyright date, in bracket] only when it differs from year of entry. Copyright date is stated only when it differs from imprint date; otherwise simply "c." No ascertainable date is designated thus: [n. d.].

Sizes are indicated as follows: F. (folio: over 30 centimeters high); O (4to: under 30 cm.); O (8vo: 25 cm.); D. (12mo: 20 cm.); S. (16mo: 17½ cm.); T. (24mo: 15 cm.); Tt. (32mo: 12½ cm.); Ff. (48mo: 10 cm.); sq., obl., nar., designate square, oblong, narrow.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

UNSOLD or returned books of the Henry Huth collection, numbering 232 lots, will be sold at Sotheby's in London February 27.

Hitherto unpublished chapters from the "Autobiography" of Mark Twain are now appearing in Harper's Magazine. Selections were printed in the North American Review in 1906 and 1907 but the greater portion of the manuscript remained unpublished.

Another important Dickens collection, that of William Glyde Wilkins of Pittsburgh, rich in first editions and Dickensiana of every description, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries, February 13 and 14. Mr. Wilkins has been one of the most enthusiastic and constant of American Dickens collectors and the gathering that he has made has never been surpassed in general interest.

The Harvard University Corporation has passed a resolution opposing the book schedule of the Fordney Tariff Bill and has forwarded the same to Chairman Fordney. The resolution states that in the opinion of the corporation the proposal would "seriously handicap American libraries, teachers and men of science and would accomplish no useful purpose commensurate with the harm done to American scholarship."

The next booksale at the American Art Galleries will be held on February 27 when the collection of colonial and constitutional laws from the library of Russell Benedict, justice of the supreme court of New York, will be dispersed. This collection not only contains some very rare lots of colonial New York laws but of the other original thirteen colonies as well. It is said to be one of the most important collections of its kind in this country.

Among the various commemorations of the sixth centenary of Dante's death in Europe, the most important was that held by the Laurentian Library at Florence. Here were seven rooms filled with the rarest known manuscripts, first and early editions, translations, author's letters and manuscripts and personal relics of the great Italian poet. This library alone contains 180 early manuscripts of Dante's writings or of books relating to him. To these manuscripts and other material were added loans from private collections and other well-known libraries in Italy. Some Dante scholars who went to Florence especially to see this exhibition have written with the greatest enthusiasm about it.

Not since Walter T. Wallace was gathering his important library a decade ago and personally attending the auctions and doing his own bidding, has another collector followed the same course to the extent that William R. Hearst is now doing. George G. Smith, it will be remembered, made Mr. Wallace pay very high prices for many of his books. But times have greatly changed since those days. There has been no indication that the trade has resented Mr. Hearst's independent buying. Of course Mr. Hearst has paid pretty well for some of his books but this was because he is always buying the best and when he wants a lot he is quite willing to pay for it. Mr. Hearst seems to enjoy the sport very much and he adds a picturesque and dramatic element to the sales he attends that makes him doubly welcome to those who attend for the entertainment that they can get out of them.

The Ruskin collection of Charles E. Goodspeed, the Boston rare book dealer, the result of many years of painstaking search, consisting of first and other editions of interest and importance and a vast amount of Ruskiniana, said to be the most extensive in this country and probably not surpassed by any in England with the possible exception of that belonging to Sir Alexander Wedderburn, has been presented to the Wellesley College Library. This library has also received important gifts from Prof. George Herbert Palmer of his Tennyson and Browning collections consisting of first and rare editions, complete in the case of Tennyson, and also in that of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning with the exception of "Pauline." Both include manuscripts of great value; in the one case, the still unpublished love letters of Arthur Hallam to Emily Tennyson, and, in the other, the original manuscript of "Aurora Leigh," corrected and interlined and annotated so as to be almost undecipherable.

OXFORD BOOKS

No home is a real home without books

A LITTLE MUSIC, a choice picture or two, and a shelf of good books mark a REAL home, for they distinguish those who appreciate the finer things in life from those who don't. Where you find culture you will inevitably find Oxford books.

THE LEGACY OF GREECE

Edited by R. W. LIVINGSTONE

A remarkable book written by a dozen of the world's greatest classical scholars to show what modern civilization owes to that of Greece and what it can still learn from her.

Net $3.25

A BOOK OF WOMEN'S VERSE

By J. C. SQUIRE

"Poetry is poetry whoever writes it, but so far as my observation goes, people do feel curiosity about women's contributions to the arts. I felt this curiosity when I conceived this anthology: and it would be stupid not to admit it." A delightful addition to Mr. Squire's already long list of charming volumes.

Net $3.75

WILTSHIRE ESSAYS

By MAURICE HEWLETT

In a happy mood Mr. Hewlett says of these essays "they were all written in my county. Some of them deal with the doings of my neighbors as I view them from here; some deal with literature as I think about it here." Incidentally they make good reading for anybody anywhere.

Net $2.50

A MUSICAL PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

By J. D. M. RORKE

Written with candour and without convention this book records the psychological development of an amateur music lover. A most attractive book for anyone to whom music means more than sounding brass or tinkling cymbal.

Net $2.25

ETRUSCAN TOMB PAINTINGS

By FREDERIK POULSEN

A splendidly illustrated work describing the subject and significance of these paintings. Those who have read George Dennis Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria will find here the illustrations so notably lacking in that work.

$6.25

THE SECOND PERSON SINGULAR AND OTHER ESSAYS

By ALICE MEYNELL

Miss Meynell, whose writing Meredith speaks of as "lucid in its depth" contributes a new volume of critical studies dealing with the petits maîtres in literature for the discriminating reader.

$2.70

PEACE CONFERENCE

A HISTORY OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE

Edited by H. W. V. Temperley

5 vols. Net $44.50

This is a great work on a great subject and will in times to come be accepted as the standard contemporary history. It is issued under the auspices of the Institute of International Affairs.

ORIENTAL

THE MUSIC OF INDIA

By Herbert A. Popley

$2.00

An authoritative manual which leads the reader by gradual steps to an understanding of the standards by which Indian music should be judged and to the conviction that it is not only an art but a difficult and intricate one too.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE

By E. J. Thompson

$1.15

A brief but satisfactory biography throwing much light on the oriental subtlety of Tagore's thought. It is also the first study to be based on the original Bengali texts.

SERINDIA

By Sir Aurel Stein 5 vols. $90.00

Officially this work is an account of Sir Aurel Stein's great Central-Asian expedition in the years 1906-9, but actually it is an inexhaustible mine for any one interested in Asian art, archaeology, manners, customs and early history. A work to marvel at for its hundreds of beautiful plates in color and colotype.

OXFORD BOOKS

Let us talk about your home

WHEN FRIENDS drop in—are your books in keeping with the rest? Your furnishings reflect your comfort, and sometimes your prosperity. But your books tell instantly what you think and are. Oxford books not only afford the greatest satisfaction to the reader, but their reputation for character gives an added distinction to your library.

THE ENGLISH MADRIGAL COMPOSERS

By EDMUND HORACE FELLOWES

$7.20

The first work to deal exclusively with the English Madrigal. As an historical study of English music at a period when it held first place in European music it should interest students and amateur music lovers as well as a large body of singers.

THE SECOND PERSON SINGULAR AND OTHER ESSAYS

By ALICE MEYNELL

$2.70

Miss Meynell, whose writing Meredith speaks of as "lucid in its depth" contributes a new volume of critical studies dealing with the petits maîtres in literature for the discriminating reader.

PRINCIPLES OF REVOLUTION

By C. DELISLE BURNS

Net $1.75

"This is not an apologia but an exposition of certain historic ideals and their application to the circumstances of our own time."

THE WITCH-CULT IN WESTERN EUROPE

By MARGARET ALICE MURRAY

$5.65

An intensive study of the religious beliefs, ritual and organization of the mediaeval witch-cults which the author identifies as the ancient pre-Christian religion of Western Europe.

THE AMERICAN INDIAN

By CLARK WISSLER

$5.00

Never before, we think, has so much authoritative information on the Indian race and its culture been presented in a single attractive volume.

THE WORLD OF TODAY SERIES

Edited by VICTOR GOLLANCZ

Each volume, net $1.00

This series provides in concise and attractive form discussions of the main problems and events of the modern world. Backward Peoples, by Sir HARRY JOHNSTON; Modern Finance, by EMILE BURNS; Industrial Ideals, by VICTOR GOLLANCZ; Foreign Exchange, by T.E. GREGORY and Increased Production by E. LIPSON are among the twenty or more titles so far issued.

EDUCATION

CHILDREN AND CHILDHOOD

By N. Niemeyer

$2.50

An attempt to see more clearly the subjects of psychology in the work and play of real children. It is the numerous illustrations of these facts drawn from life which make this book valuable to parent and teacher.

EXPRESSION IN SPEECH AND WRITING

By E. A. Greening Lamborn

$2.00

An account of experiments made at East Oxford School, of which the author is headmaster, to develop the expressive powers in children. A book for thoughtful parents as well as teachers.

ANCIENT GREECE

GREEK HERO CULTS AND IDEAS OF IMMORTALITY

By Lewis Richard Farnell

$7.20

This new volume continues and supplements Dr. Farnell's great work Cults of the Greek States. Readers interested in the culture and religious thought of ancient Greece and students of comparative religion will find it an indispensable work.

NEW CHAPTERS IN THE HISTORY OF GREEK LITERATURE

Edited by J. U. Powell and E. A. Barber

$4.75

An account by various classical scholars of the recent discoveries in Greek poetry and prose of the fourth and following centuries B. C.

*Our Travelers will tell you of these,
but perhaps you'd like advance information.*

(1) We have every reason to believe that the imposing life of William De Morgan, which we shall publish in early April, will stand out as the most important literary biography of the year. It is charmingly illustrated from paintings, caricatures, reproductions of letters, and delightfully informal photographs. The 150,000 readers of De Morgan's books will place this with pride on their shelves beside his novels.

(2) In fiction we have "Patchwork," a brilliant novel of post-war days at Oxford. It is a sort of counterpart of Fitzgerald's and Benet's point of view in relation to England. The London Observer says "At last here is a novel which will live!" "Children of Transgression" by G. Vere Taylor is a thrilling story of the South. Gage has caught the spirit of the book in his four color jacket. "The Secret Partner" by Elizabeth Frazer is the first novel of one of the most popular writers on the staff of the Saturday Evening Post.

(3) Romain Rolland's new love story, Pierre et Luce, is fiction of such importance that we list it separately.

(4) Of singular timeliness also is a new book "Motion Pictures for Community Needs." It will solve the problems which have confronted so many churches and colleges in the selection and use of pictures of the higher type for educational and community purposes.

(5) We have twenty-five other books ranging from biography to a helpful book on Golf. Our Spring Catalogue, attractively gotten up with illustrations, is now ready and we shall be glad to mail it to you at your request.
